Hey everyone - I wanted to give you guys an early look at something we've been working on for some time: a brand new experience for integrating with Facebook -- both when creating new apps, and when integrating a new platform into an existing app.

Our working title for this project has been "Quick Starts" - because they're designed to get you up and running with a working Facebook integration as quickly as possible. Over the next few weeks, this new experience will replace th... See More

Who reviews the apps? I have a really simple one, with detailed instructions of each step in the flow, including screenshots, but they're still telling me to include instructions: "Please provide detailed, step-by-step screenshots of the Facebook login flow, as well as the publishing flow, including a timeline screenshot of the story published on Facebook."

I suspect a bot is reviewing these, but I'm not sure what my red flag is. I know for a fact a human didn't try my instructions, because they involve sending an email, and there are no emails from anyone, other than my testers.

It's much simpler to develop apps for Apple and Google. They give detailed, intelligible, non-canned feedback. And they don't punish you for trying to get your app approved.

It's a bit of a pain having to add screenshots & steps for each permission though

18 mins · Like

Christoph Broeckmann You should not submit an app for review if you are not done implementing core functionality yet, but have only rudimentary parts of it working – that will most likely be declined anyway.

If your client wants to “test” something, then you should add them as a tester to your app – that way, they can be asked for permissions that are not approved yet.

I'm working on an app whose only permission is publish actions to enable social sharing for a website. I want the app hidden from the public (e.g. I don't want it listed in the app center). In order to do the review it requires me to add a 1024x1024 logo, long description and support e-mail. Is there a way to make the app private from searching and/or the app center?

The reason you get it is that you turned on 2 factor auth required for your app

Hi all - just wanting to see if anyone can provide some guidance on a Facebook app we recently developed, that is currently awaiting approval with FB Development platform now for over 7 days.

Does anyone know of a way to speed up this approval process? The app uses share functionalities (you upload an image, and then tag a friend to get them to go and do the same thing).

It's for a charity, and the app approval is slowing up our launch of the campaign that is focused on driving donations for a heart foundation. All help greatly appreciated!

Hello, I have a question about Facebooks platform policy. If I make a Facebook contest app, which requests the name and the FB-mail from the user, and the user rejects the app, is it then required to offer the user to participate in another way - like entering the name manually?

Like · Comment
View 3 more comments

Christoph Broeckmann That is a different issue – your app should not show the login dialog over and over again automatically if the user presses “cancel” on it.

If the user does that, then inform them that they can not participate without login in to your app – and offer them to trigger login again by clicking on a link/button.

2 hrs · Like · 1
Emil Hesslow Yes if someone clicks cancel you are not allowed to just pop the login dialog again and again and again. You instead should display some information to the user why you need them to login and have a button that the user can click if they want to login

Kasper Bengtson Great! As it is now, a error-messages states why the user needs to give the app access if the user clicks cancel. Thank you very much for the answer - I really appreciate that!
